Harm Reduction in Practice

Harm reduction is about:

- Meeting people where they are, without judgment.
- Prioritizing safety, dignity, and individual choice.
- Recognizing any positive change as progress
- Respecting every persons' right to make decisions about their life

Harm reduction strategies for everyday life:

- Practicing safe sex by using condoms and getting tested for STIs regularly
- Using a helmet while biking or wearing a seatbelt when driving
- Utilizing fentanyl test strips and carrying Narcan
- Never using alone and letting someone know where you are
- Wearing sunscreen and drinking water on a hot day
- Creating a safety plan for hard times and knowing who to reach out to for support

Why Does Harm Reduction Matter?

- Saves lives: Overdose prevention, naloxone, and other safety measures can help prevent avoidable deaths.
- Protects health: Prevention, testing, early intervention, and access to care can reduce health risks.
- Reduces stigma: Compassionate, nonjudgmental support makes it easier to seek help.
- Promotes empowerment: People can make informed decisions based on their own needs, values, and goals.
- Builds connection: Accessible services and supportive communities help reduce isolation and barriers to care.
- Supports change: Harm reduction can complement treatment, recovery, and other personal goals.

Mental Health and Harm Reduction

Harm reduction is about meeting people where they are in life. While respecting that people make choices that carry risk, harm reduction aims to help people stay alive, healthy, and connected to support so that they can make positive change in their own time.

For mental health and wellbeing, harm reduction means supporting people through struggles by focusing on their safety and connection rather than expecting immediate change. This can look like creating a safety plan for crises, creating goals, setting boundaries, going to therapy, or learning positive coping skills all in people's own time and on their terms.

Activities and Tips To Relax Your Mind and Improve Your Mental Health

- Practice mindfulness: Try slowing down and take a minute or two breathe intentionally, notice feelings in your body, or focus on one of your senses. These techniques help shift your attention to the present moment and manage difficult emotions.
- Engage in a hobby: Reading, drawing, or listening to music are all activities that can help you build connection and confidence.
- Come to a group at the Wellness Center: We offer groups covering many topics and activities including art, movies, emotions, coping skills, and writing!
- Be kind to yourself: Rephrase negative comments. For example, instead of saying "I'm lazy" say "I needed rest."
- Move your body: Stretching, dancing, and yoga are just a few examples of ways to move your body to release tension and improve your mood.
- Attend therapy: Therapy gives you a space to talk with a professional about stress, trauma, relationships, and more. Therapy can help you understand your feelings, find positive coping skills that work for you, and improve your mental wellbeing.
